Part XVII. of "Cuneiform Texts from Babylonian Tablets, etc.," contains texts from ninety-nine clay tablets, and fragments of the Kouyunjik and other collections. The texts are magical, some being written in the Babylonian character and others in Assyrian. They may be divided into the following groups :

(1.) Texts belonging to the Series AŠAKKI MARṢÛTI, i.e., "The Fever Sickness," and ṬI'I, i.e., "Headaches." Portions of texts belonging to both Series were published by the late General Sir H. C. Rawlinson, Bart., G.C.B., in the Fourth Volume of the "Cuneiform Inscriptions of Western Asia," but with the exception of two tablets these compositions were not clearly identified at the time of their publication in 1875. Subsequently, however, owing to the rejoining of many hitherto unidentified fragments in the Kouyunjik Collection, and the discovery of many duplicates in that and in the Babylonian Collections, much new material has been collected, which is published in the following plates for the first time. The Series AŠAKKI MARṢÛTI contained at least twelve "Tablets," and at present portions of the First, Third, Ninth, Eleventh, and Twelfth Tablets have been identified and their proper place assigned to them. The Series ṬI'I originally consisted of nine Tablets, of which portions of the Third, Sixth, Eighth, and Ninth have now been identified and their proper place assigned to them. (Plates 1–28.)

(2.) Miscellaneous Incantation texts, of a similar character, some of which supply the spells that were to be recited over small figures of clay and dough, with the object of driving out certain diseases caused by evil spirits. Others provide exorcisms for averting the Evil Eye, the laying of spirits under a ban, and for doing away the evil effects of ceremonial uncleanness. Among this group of texts is one (KK. 4859, 5139, and 5317) which has been held to prove that the Babylonians were in the habit of offering up their children as sacrifices, but the main portion of the tablet, which has been recently identified and rejoined to one of the fragments mentioned above, shows that the text belongs to a class of incantations which treat of sympathetic magic, and there is no foundation for the theory. The composition relates to a certain sickness, or disease, which seized upon the body of a man, and states that the god Ea ordained that a kid or lamb should be offered as a substitute for the man, limb for limb, i.e., the animal's head for the man's head, its neck for his neck, its breast for his breast, etc. In brief, the new portions of this text support the view that the word urṣu does not mean "child," but the offspring of some beast. (Plates 29–41.)

(3.) Tablets inscribed with descriptions of a number of Gods and Mythological Monsters. (Plates 42–45.)

(4.) A number of additional fragments belonging to the Series UTUKKI LIMNÛTI, of which the greater portion has been published in Part XVI. of this publication. (Plates 46–49.)

(5.) A mythological and magical text, which describes the creation of the Worm that caused toothache, and gives directions for the steps which are to be taken to destroy its evil work. (Plate 50.)

Since the printing off of the plates, the tablet "AA" (Plates 38*ff*) has been found to be the continuation of the Eighth Tablet of this Series LUḪ. KA. (Plate 41.)

The copies have been made by Mr. R. Campbell Thompson, M.A., Assistant in the Department.
